Information about Oratory:

The characteristics of oratory that distinguishes it from public speaking, in general is that it appeals to the emotions. No matter how clear, logical or effective speaking may be, as long as it appeals primarily to the intellect, it remains public speaking.

When, however, emotions are touched – love, joy, hate, ambition- then speaking becomes oratory. And although oratory appeals powerfully to the emotions of the hearer, yet it is not necessarily preaching.

Oratory is composed of two elements: matter and manner. When one gives an oration, one should be certain of the content and substance of his/her oration. Orations must be original and done from memory. You MAY NOT read verbatim; however, notes MAY BE used. The time limit is 2-10 minutes depending on your age-group category.

PLEASE NOTE: In the national oratorical competition, you will not be able to use any notes.
